Strategic Radiology Creates CMO Position, Chooses Greg Rose, MD, PhD

February 13, 2017 — Radiologist Greg Rose, MD, PhD, has joined Strategic Radiology LLC, as its chief medical officer. His primary focus will be to lead clinical quality efforts and extend subspecialized reading service lines offered to members across its reading network.

“As a physician owned and led organization, we recognize in Dr. Rose the passion for excellence and leadership that will help us to add value for our patients, hospital clients, and member practices,” said Arl Van Moore, Jr., MD, FACR, chairman of Strategic Radiology. “Through collaboration, Strategic Radiology combines the best features of local independence with centralized leadership to move us forward as a united organization.”

Dr. Rose is the founder of Rays®, a teleradiology service recognized by the industry and the market for quality and service. He completed his radiology residency at Baylor University and an MRI fellowship at Mayo Clinic. Dr. Rose earned a PhD in physics from Texas A & M, and holds three radiology technology patents.

“It will be my great privilege to serve such a large group of talented and honorable radiologists and its great vision for the future of radiology,” said Dr. Rose. “As we mobilize for closer collaboration among member practices, I couldn’t be more excited about the future of private practice through Strategic Radiology.”

Dr. Rose has published research in the fields of solid state theory, laser theory, mammography, teleradiology, and magnetic resonance elastography. He was a co-architect of a trademarked distributed-reading platform with a unified worklist and has been in private radiology practice since 1998.
